

Restoring Internet Freedom

I am a small business owner reliant on daily high speed internet access to conduct my business, and increasingly reliant on such access in my personal life as well. The proposed changes in FCC rules as I understand them would cause me considerable harm and have consequences opposite those suggested by “restoring internet freedom.” It has not escaped public notice that these measures really mean restoring internet profits for Verizon. In the 21st century, there is no question that internet access should be considered a public utility, and providers of this service are properly regulated under title II.

The choices made here will be historic – please make certain that they are a historic defense of citizens, not of corporate profiteering.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to be "EG" or similar, located at the bottom left of the page.